

- Cancer and other degenerative diseases affect a wide proportion of the Australian population. Cancer and palliative nursing is therefore a significant component of nursing practice and specialist knowledge and skills is essential to maximise the therapeutic outcome for the person and family throughout the illness experience. Likewise increased knowledge of care for people at the end of life across a range of health settings is paramount.