In previous years, students have completed research essays on a very wide variety of topics. We certainly do our best to accommodate this diversity of interests, and usually can, but in order that we may do this - in particular, find supervisors and markers - we need advance notice of your proposed topic. If accepted into Fourth Year Honours, you should therefore give the Honours Co-ordinator a one paragraph outline, indicating if possible the texts/objects of study and the approach that you plan to adopt, as soon as possible. The Honours Co-ordinator will then proceed to consult other staff and find or confirm supervisors and markers, and report back to you if it appears that your proposed topic will have to be modified to some degree. In rare instances a topic may have to be reconsidered.
