

Skills for Life

Lifeskills is a Registered Training Organisation which provides a range of accredited courses and lifestyle programs to people with a disability. Established at La Trobe University's Bundoora campus by Ros Leslie in 1998, Lifeskills has grown substantially and now offers programs to approximately 60 participants. The Lifeskills model of learning is unique in that it provides the occasion for people with an intellectual disability to fully participate in university life as they are supported in their pursuit of other work/life opportunities.

Ros Leslie heads this discussion on the Lifeskills model of learning and invites contributions from interested parties on the ways in which the scope and ambitions of this program might be further broadened.

The Institute for Social Participation is pleased to invite you to this roundtable discussion.
