Building social inclusion for rural older people using 'Information Communication Technologies'—What are the challenges?

A roundtable workshop sponsored by the Institute For Social Participation, La Trobe University, will provide a discussion platform for local community stakeholders and key national researchers. The discussion will consider the challenges for older rural people as they navigate the emergence and innovation of new technologies.

The discussion seeks to stimulate input from across the service landscape and capture the issues to be addressed in order to assist older rural Australians to pursue meaningful, positive ageing within the context of rural disadvantage.

How such innovation shapes the social participation, social inclusion and the wellbeing of our older rural Australians forms the basis for our discussion.

Contributions are sought from a broad representation of health & community services to represent the experiences of older consumers and carers. This discussion is expected to inform future partnered research, with the view to address the identified needs of older rural Australians.
