

Public health and health administration are both dependant upon information and in today's healthcare environment comparative information, available quickly is even more important. Information systems are expensive and difficult to implement but every major electronic health record (EHR) initiative around the globe is now investing heavily in and using standards to reduce costs and increase compatibility of systems and data. Heather will discuss these initiatives and their potential to deliver benefits to public health and health administration.