A timeline of alcohol-relevant restrictions during the COVID-19 pandemic

In order to combat the COVID-19 pandemic in Australia, extraordinary policy changes have been enacted at both a federal and state level. The most notable being the periods of time in which individuals could only leave their homes for “the four reasons”; healthcare, shopping for essentials, exercise and essential work or childcare¹. The impacts of this on a range of health and economic outcomes for Australians will no doubt be examined and investigated over the coming years.

COVID-19 related restrictions have resulted in an unprecedented shift of alcohol consumption from licensed premises into private homes as all on-premise dining and drinking is not allowed during the stricter levels of restrictions. Retail drinks Australia imposed volume limits on purchasing². These limits were not put in place on public health grounds, but rather they were about rationing and preventing stockpiling, similar to the limits placed on essentials such as toilet paper and pasta. An outbreak in a large pub in NSW led to restrictions on large gatherings in licensed premises, among concerns that alcohol might inhibit people’s ability to implement social distancing measures³. A range of other restrictions around the number of visitors allowed in people’s homes have been introduced and removed at varying times around the country.

Research examining the impact of the COVID-19 restrictions on alcohol consumption and harms will need to account for the shifting pandemic-specific regulations at both a federal and state level. The aim of this report is to provide a resource outlining the implementation, easing and re-introduction of all COVID-19 regulations that might impact alcohol consumption.

METHODS

We identified major policy changes implemented as part of the COVID-19 response by the Commonwealth government (and thus applying to all jurisdictions) and by state and territory governments. Policy changes were identified primarily through government media releases, press conferences and official government websites. This information was compiled into a spreadsheet and updated fortnightly to ensure all relevant policy changes were captured. Policies were included if they logically might have an impact on alcohol consumption.

NB: Red cells indicate a tightening of restrictions. Acronyms used: square metres (sqm) and Local Government Area (LGA).
